Not A Stones Movie

Wyman On Film

According to Rolling Stones bassist Bill Wyman, his first movie, Digital Dreams, may be autobiographical in a whimsical, fantasy vein, but it is definitely not a Rolling Stones film.

The 72-minute film was directed by Oscar-winning documentary filmmaker Robert Dornhelm, and the original target of the film was television and cable. However, manager Eric Gardner said that early showings of a roughcut 42-minute version of the film brought requests from business people to expand Digital Dreams in order to make it more salable as a theatrical release.

Wyman is the sole financier for the project, which Gardner says is as much about Wyman's life outside of the band as his life with them. All advertising is downplaying the connection with the Rolling Stones as, out of the present 72-minutes in running time, about 9 minutes is historical footage of the Rolling Stones.

Of the present 72-minutes in running time, only 9 minutes is actual historical footage of the Rolling Stones
